EARTH AND SOUL

MIND / BODY / SPIRIT

Who needs laws
Who needs prisons
We've found trust
We've found instinct
A new emotion every day
Repairing animality

Photographs and discord calls
Secondary to tear point falls
My healed heart proof of concept
No self-hate, no natural defect

The non-linear narrative of my conscience streams
My nightmare flashbacks and mania screed
I'll be me, seeing what I see
Time is wherever I want it to be

This place is perfect
This air won't forget
The voices, the colours, the brand new emotions
The epiphanal proof of concept

No one left behind
No one will forget
The experience of waking up
In sushiplex

Chloe

Goodbye Sweet Sushiplex

Fragility of concrete
Meet fragility of mind
Abandoned empty rooms
Abandoned empty souls

Forged by colonisation
Found by ostracisation,
Remade by imagination
Solified by memory,
Creating history,
Correcting destiny
Bunny and a bee
They're rewilding community

Tears wash away by rain
But never leave their point of fall,
Capital sickness cannot compete
With the love and light real estate
Summer, autumn, winter weather
Pink and blue and white together
A magic mixture built to sever
Any laws, any vice, any guilt, whoever, whatever,

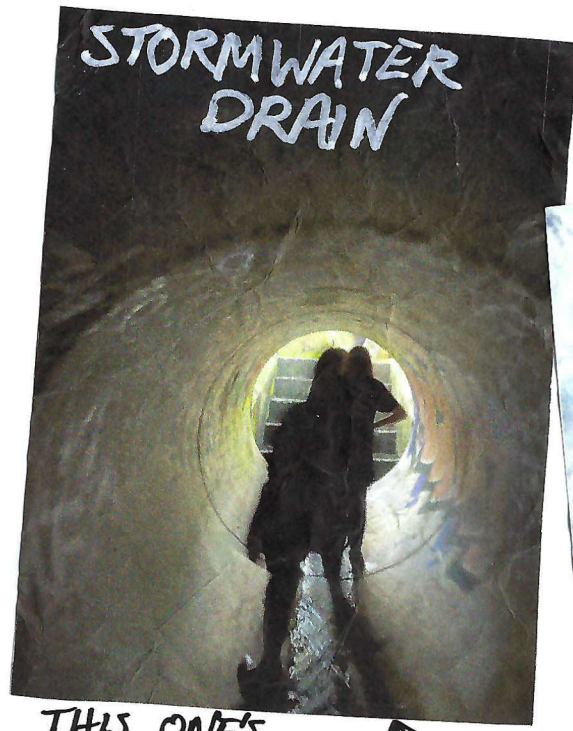

Paint the grey with your deepest shame
Cracks in walls heal cracks in souls
Take up space and take up peace,
Forever marked lease on lease

SCOUNDREL

Original game by Zach Gage & Kurt Bieg

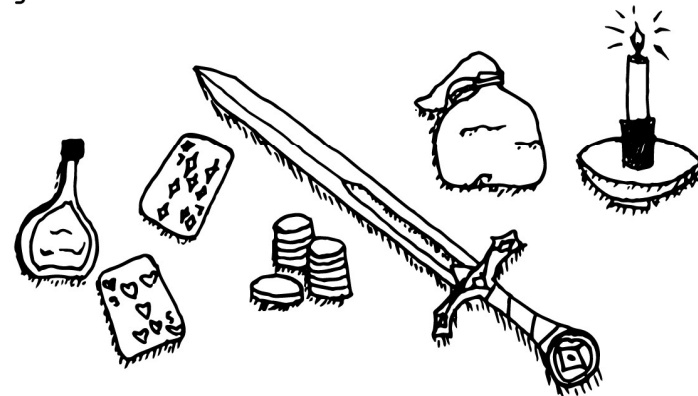

I love playing cards! A simple deck of 54 (inc. Jokers) can provide an unlimited amount of fun. Me personally, I love Solitaire games.

SCOUNDREL is my latest obsession when it comes to the solitaire genre. It's a rouge-like inspired dungeon crawler where you play a crafty rogue navigating their way through a dungeon, slaying all the monsters in your path with a dwindling set of resources.

It's a game about prioritising which resources you will use, and which you want to leave for later. In order to succeed you must take risks, punch above your weight and know when it's time to fight, and when it's time to flee.

I'm making it sound a lot more exciting than it actually is, but Scoundrel is genuinely some of the most fun I think you can have with a simple deck of cards. I'm currently working on an expansion or redesign of the rules which allow for long-term play, as I think that could make a fun solo game to play on the go.

Check out the rules via the QR code below, and good luck in the dungeon!

IT'S GOING TO BE SO MUCH FUN!

SO... YOU
WANNA RUN
YOUR OWN

BBQ?

Your handy tear-out guide for unorganising and running a local community event

Getting People Interested

The first thing you should know about running a BBQ is that it's easier to get people interested than you might think! While we can't promise you'll always get a good turnout, here's some tips and tricks for generating interest in your BBQ and finding others to come along :)

1) MAKE A COOL POSTER

This is your bread and butter. Write down some details, talk about the event and why you're running it, who you want to come, etc. Post it to socials and other places you're active (noticeboards, discord servers, etc), and make sure to invite all your friends along too.

2) START LOCAL

If even one other person comes to the BBQ and has a good time, it's a success. Try to pick a location that's easy to get to, with parking and/or public transport access. Parks and beaches are good, or shopping malls, or anywhere really.

3) FREE FOOD

This is really important!!!! You can't have a BBQ without food. Bring some basics, sausages/hotdogs and bread are cheap. Make sure there's enough for everyone to eat. People who can afford it are usually happy to contribute.

+If you have too much food, people can take it home after.

What To Bring

This list is bound to grow over time as we run more events, but we've figured out a pretty good list of things to pack for your BBQ so it all runs smooth as butter.

Note: We use a public electric BBQ. You might need to bring your own cooker if they're not available where you live.
